

Editorial

Dear Readers,

When this issue goes to publication, the whole world is still in the middle of the crisis, though less intensely felt than the earlier moment of the greater lockdown. It is probably safe to suggest that the impacts of this event on our daily lives are one of the most global and most deeply penetrating in world history. In one way or another, all of us have been touched by the crisis and forced to accommodate. Yet we have unceasingly published all the issues of BiLD Law Journal in due time with proper quality.

Although a focus on the coronavirus has disrupted us to circulate the print copies of the very previous issue within due time, BiLD has tried its best and finally reached to the contributors. By any measurable standard, our exclusively online journal has been successful: we have seen a steady increase in readership, article submissions, and citations to our published articles.

In this issue I am pleased to present only six scholarly articles, though there have many articles in the pipeline received by the journal's team. This six articles are from five different countries (Nepal, India, Nigeria, Tanzania and Bangladesh) and are related to topics like contemporaneous Indo-Nepal dispute, article 17.6 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, dissolution of customary law marriage in Nigeria and intestate inheritance, Regulatory 'Tactics' in the regulation of Primary SACCOS' Credit Advancement in Tanzania, national industrial court strides towards attaining safe workplace for Nigeria's female workers, and student politics of Bangladesh under legal perspective, contemporary trends and projection of its prospective re-emergence. I hope that the articles published in this issue will reflect the journal's new focus.

I wish to put on record my sincere appreciation and thankfulness to every single people involved and contributed by all means especially Sorowar Nizami to make this journal published in a right manner. I would also like to express heartfelt gratitude from BiLD family to the members of the Review Board and observers for their kind support and valuable advising. I also want to recognise the indebtedness to all the members of the editorial panel for publishing the journal in due time amidst the pandemic of coronavirus.

Finally, I would like to welcome and congratulate the authors of research papers in this first issue of the sixth volume of BiLD Law Journal.

Md. Abul Kalam Azad
Editor-in-Chief